

► Harris and Christopher Kelly start off with an article describing patient education in clinical trials throughout the product lifecycle. They highlight the importance of ensuring that patients are adequately informed about medical treatments that affect them. Elodie du Potet offers us the French perspective on medical education, which is highly regulated and is limited to communicating about a specific therapeutic area, and Catrin Marx and Christopher Baethge discuss how

CME is performed in Germany and the advantages of using multiple choice questions to improve the quality of CME training units. Meanwhile, Namrata Singh and Ritu Sharma provide us with an insight into the role of the medical writer in running advisory board meetings in India. Finally, Melody Watson and Mark Esser describe how to best write a review paper, with lots of very practical advice, and Yvonne Anderson and colleagues share with us their experience building an independent medical education event.

Acknowledgement

I'd like to thank Eugene Pozniak, managing director of Siyemi Learning and Programme Director of the European CME Forum for giving me his valuable time to explain the facets of medical education today and sharing his views on the changing landscape of medical education.

President's Message

Dear EMWA Members,

Since my last message your committee have been busy on several initiatives. In November we held a very successful conference in Brussels with over 200 delegates. This provided 18 foundation and 10 advanced level workshops and an extended Freelance Business Forum as well as an opportunity to network with fellow professionals and taste the famous Belgian beer and chocolate. We continue to reach out to those considering or just embarking on a career in medical communications and provided a free seminar entitled 'Introduction to Medical Writing' as part of the conference.

There are a number of updates to our website planned or already available. These include a revised FAQ document and an updated Career Guide to Medical Writing which includes information on the different types of writing and employment possibilities. We are also investigating a new website platform which will significantly improve response time and allow us to develop the website further

We maintain our profile within the medical communications arena. By the end of September CORE Reference had hit 3,000 downloads and a growing list of companies have adopted, or otherwise support its use. We also worked with AMWA and GAPP and ISMPP in providing a response to an article in the BMJ criticising the important and ethical contributions medical writers make to the scientific literature. All four organisations have been working toward transparency and disclosure for more than 15 years and we believe great progress has been made although, of course, more can be done in some areas.

A survey was sent out in October as part of EMWA's commitment to representing, supporting, and training all our members, which I hope you all completed and returned. This has provided us with up-to-date information on who are members are, what they do, and what they want from the organisation, and we are currently in the process of analysing the data. The results of the survey will be reported in Medical Writing next year.

As we come to the end of 2016, I would like to take this opportunity to thank all those who make EMWA what it is, the volunteers and workshop leaders, the Executive Committee (EC), all those of you who contribute to our journal and of course the staff at Head office who keep everything running. This month you will receive an e-mail inviting you to apply for the vacant positions on the EC. Please consider whether this is something you would like to do. We are a friendly bunch and although it can be hard work there are also definite rewards. It is always good to have new faces and ideas.

Happy Christmas and best wishes for 2017 to you all. Enjoy the holiday!

Best wishes
Alison
